[1868]

Extracted from Minutes passed by the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council on Education ; dated Dec. 1865, and Feb. 1866.

“ In reference to the Distribution of Art Examples ; after taking into consideration the several systems which had been adopted, either of direct sale by the Department to Art Schools, &c., or by sale through Agents in the ordinary channels of trade, their Lordships were led to believe that a system might be adopted by which a public Society, not looking to large profits, might be found willing to undertake the responsibility of all commercial transactions connected with the purchase and sale of Examples ; whilst the Department of Science and Art might promote the success of the undertaking by affording sufficient space in the South Kensington Museum for exhibiting the Examples to the public, and by advertising the works for sale.

“ In reference to a communication on the same subject subsequently received from the ‘ ARUNDEL SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE KNOWLEDGE OF ART,’ their Lordships considered that Society a peculiarly eligible channel for assisting the action of the Department, and directed that arrangements for the publication and sale of Photographs and other Art Examples produced by the Science and Art Department should forthwith be entered into with the Arundel Society.”

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION, SECOND SERIES, 1867.

The second of the series of Exhibitions of National Portraits at South Kensington, chronologically following the first, commenced with the reign of William and Mary, and contained eight hundred and sixty-six portraits of the distinguished historical characters who lived between that period and the termination of the eighteenth century. The liberality displayed by the owners in 1866, in allowing their pictures to be photographed and published for the purpose of instruction in the Schools of Art, was continued by the lenders of the portraits exhibited in 1867.

A few of the paintings could not be reproduced by photography, this catalogue therefore contains only eight hundred and thirty-two of these portraits, many of which are by the most celebrated artists of the period. Among them may be enumerated thirty by Hogarth, fifty by Gainsborough, one hundred and forty-five by Sir Joshua Reynolds, twelve by Allan Ramsay, twenty-one by Romney, three by Benjamin West, and twelve of the earlier works of Sir Thomas Lawrence.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION, THIRD SERIES, 1868.

THE Exhibition of the present year concludes the chronological series suggested by the Earl of Derby. It extends from the commencement of the century to the present time, and includes the last twenty years of the reign of George the Third; the ten years comprising the reign of George the Fourth; the seven years comprising the reign of William the Fourth; and the first thirty years of the reign of Queen Victoria. As supplementary to the Exhibitions of the two previous years, the present collection also includes the portraits of many distinguished persons who were then either altogether omitted or inadequately represented, with the works of some painters to whose art due justice may not have been hitherto done.

In the first year, the Exhibition was distinguished by the works of the great foreign artists who had practised in this country. In the second year by those of our own painters, the founders of the English School, culminating in the fine portraits of Reynolds and Gainsborough, with numerous examples of their contemporaries and followers. That of the present year largely represents the works of Sir Henry Raeburn (b. 1756, d. 1823), William Owen (b. 1769, d. 1824), Sir Thomas Lawrence (b. 1769, d. 1830), John Jackson (b. 1778, d. 1831), Thomas Phillips (b. 1770, d. 1845), Sir Martin Archer Shee (b. 1769, d. 1850), Sir J. Watson Gordon (b. 1790, d. 1864), and comprises some fine examples of the works of other eminent contemporary artists, as well as of those who survive and ably sustain the reputation of the existing school of portrait-art.

There are nine hundred and forty-six pictures included in the present year's exhibition. Of these, sixty-two were not allowed to be photographed, and nineteen cannot be copied well; so that only eight hundred and sixty-five are reproduced by photography. The plan, as suggested by Lord Derby, has now been brought to the conclusion originally contemplated, and the known portraits of our most eminent men, with few exceptions, as well as the art of our best portrait painters, have been fairly represented.
